Dear Reader,

Welcome to the final edition of the Consumer Information Catalog. We started the Catalog back in 1971 when there was no easy way to get useful government information into the hands of Americans. And it's had great success, thanks to people like you. Over the years, we've filled more than 76 million orders and distributed more than 1.2 billion publications.

Along the way, we've added other avenues for connecting you to information from the government: a toll-free contact center, a family of websites, online chat, e-mail, social media like Facebook and Twitter, and the popular Consumer Action Handbook and the Guía del Consumidor.

In recent years, most people have started using our online resources instead of print. As a result, we've had to make the difficult decision to cease publication of the Consumer Information Catalog with this last edition.

But we're still committed to helping you find the information you need.

For questions about government programs and services, you can call the USAGov Contact Center toll-free at 1-844-USA-GOV1. Helpful agents answer your questions in English or in Spanish weekdays, 8:00 AM to 8:00 PM ET.

If you're an internet user, you can learn about all of our resources at USA.gov/explore. It links to our publications website, which has online versions of the booklets listed in the Consumer Information Catalog that you can read, download, and print right from your computer. You'll be able to order printed copies of a limited selection of publications from the site. USA.gov/explore will also lead you to our flagship websites, our social media accounts and more.

In the meantime, enjoy this special Catalog edition. You'll read about the program behind this Catalog, and how it revolutionized the way you get consumer information from the government. You'll find articles on managing a power of attorney for a loved one, keeping kids safe on social media, and choosing a financial advisor—a sampling of the information you'll discover at USA.gov/explore. You can order publications from this Catalog through September 15, 2016.

We're so grateful to have served generations of Americans through the Consumer Information Catalog. And we look forward to continuing to connect you with your government by phone and online.

With heartfelt thanks,

Sarah Crane

Navigating Power of Attorney: How to Help Loved Ones Manage Their Money

Managing your finances can be hard. Managing the finances of a relative or a friend can be even harder. You want to honor your loved one's wishes and respect his or her boundaries, but at the same time you need to act in his or her best interest. It can be hard to know where to begin or whom to trust. Not only are there legal obligations that come with this responsibility, but the added emotional stress of caring for a family member or friend can feel overwhelming.

So let's start with the basics: What is a power of attorney? What does it mean for you, and what should you look out for? Being informed, prepared, and alert will help make a difficult situation as comfortable as possible for all involved.

Be Informed: What Is a Power of Attorney?

A power of attorney is a written document in which one person gives legal authority to another to make decisions about his or her money or property. If you've been named to manage money or property for someone else under a power of attorney, you are the fiduciary. It doesn't matter if you're managing a small amount of money or a lot, or if you're a family member or not – you're now legally responsible for managing that money or property for the benefit of that person, known as the principal.

If you were chosen as fiduciary, the principal sees you as a trustworthy, honest, and responsible person. Preparing yourself with the necessary information will help you manage your responsibilities and will bring you, and everyone involved, peace of mind.

Be Prepared: Understanding Your Legal Duties

While a power of attorney can seem like a complex document, there are really just four major duties you need to execute as fiduciary. Your legal responsibilities are to:

- Act only in the principal's best interest.
- Manage money and property carefully.
- Keep your money and property separate from the principal's.
- Keep good records.

Because you're managing someone else's money, your responsibility is to make decisions that are best for that person. This means managing the money carefully, using good judgment and common sense, and never mixing your assets with the other person's. Keeping true and complete records is important; incorrect or incomplete records can get you in trouble with the police and with government agencies, such as a city's or state's Adult Protective Services office.

Be Alert: Protecting Your Loved Ones From Fraud

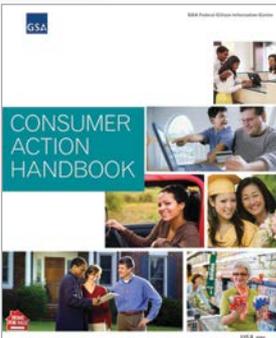

Financial exploitation has been called "the crime of the 21st century." As a fiduciary, you should know the signs of financial exploitation. Recognizing what to look for will help you protect both yourself and your loved one. Be wary if:

- You or your loved one thinks that money or property is missing.
- Your loved one shows sudden changes in spending and saving behavior.
- Your loved one puts names on bank accounts and property that can't be explained.
- Your loved one fears a relative, caregiver, or friend.
- A relative shows controlling behavior towards you or a loved one.

If you suspect fraud, you can alert banks and credit card companies or talk to an attorney about preventing future exploitation and recovering the property that was taken.

The truth is, we're all at risk. Anyone with any money could be targeted by a fraudster at some point. But you can help protect your family and friends by recognizing how fraudsters operate and by reporting suspicious scams and suspicious sales pitches.

USAGov

45 Years of Connecting Americans

It's hard to imagine a time when you couldn't easily find government information on staying safe and healthy, saving money, or getting government benefits and services.

For 45 years, the USAGov program has stood in the gap, connecting helpful information from government agencies with the people who need it.

The vision for USAGov grew from the consumer movement of the 1960s, when activists and the government joined forces to protect Americans from dishonest advertising and unsafe products. They also discovered that government research programs generated a lot of consumer information that could help make people's lives better—but there wasn't a coordinated way for agencies to share it.

In 1970, a committee of 22 federal partners urged President Nixon to establish the Consumer Product Information Coordinating Center. It was a big name for a small group of go-getters. Their mission: gather up all that helpful government information and get it into the hands of Americans.

They began by creating the Consumer Information Catalog, a quarterly listing of more than 200 free and low-cost government publications. It was such a hit that the renamed Consumer Information Center moved publication warehousing and distribution from its parent agency, the General Services Administration, to the Government Publishing Office's larger Pueblo, Colorado distribution center. To keep up with its biggest customer, the Pueblo facility got its own zip code and mail trucks. It also got some pop culture fame. In 1975, CIC started using Pueblo in playful ads introducing the Catalog and other services to the public.

For decades, the star of the Catalog has been the free Consumer Action Handbook. Started by the White House in 1979, it later became part of CIC. The Handbook and its Spanish counterpart, the Guía del Consumidor, feature helpful sample complaint letters and tips to save money and avoid scams.

In 1994, as Americans began discovering the power of the internet, CIC created Pueblo. gsa.gov. One of the country's first consumer websites, it drew more than a million visits its first year.

Americans with Their Government

In 2011, Publications.USA.gov replaced Pueblo.gsa.gov, making it even easier to order, download, and print the best of the country's free English and Spanish government publications.

Sometimes, you just need to talk to another person to get your questions answered. CIC met that need when it merged with the Federal Information Center in 2004. Begun in 1966, the FIC managed a network of contact centers. Today, it's known as the USAGov Contact Center at 1-844-USA-GOV1. Over the years, it's served other partner agencies, and added email and web chat services in English and Spanish—helping you connect to your government anytime, in any way you want.

When President Clinton asked federal agencies to create children's websites in 2001, Kids.gov was born. It's the place kids, their parents, and teachers can find fun and educational information from across government.

In 2002, the renamed Federal Citizen Information Center's web program went into overdrive with USA.gov—the federal government's official website. Originally named FirstGov.gov, the site began in 2000 when an internet entrepreneur gifted a powerful search engine to the government. Now, instead of going from site to site looking for answers, you can go directly to USA.gov and its Spanish counterpart, GobiernoUSA.gov to easily connect with programs, services, and information from across government.

Six Tips For Keeping Teens Safe On Social Media

More than 60 percent of teens in the United States have at least one social media account, according to the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry. And while being online is a good way to keep in touch with friends, it's important for parents to be proactive about Internet safety.

Unfortunately, there are people who can use your child's personal information to steal identities, bully them or begin an inappropriate relationship. Help protect students from online

dangers by following these safety tips:

1. Keep your child's profile private so that only family and people you know can see photos, important dates and other information.
2. Make sure your kids aren't posting personal details, including phone numbers, home address, and the name of their school or Social Security number.
3. Only allow them to publish photos and videos that don't jeopardize their safety or their integrity.
4. Make sure they choose a strong password that can't be guessed and update that password every three months.
5. Never allow your kids to accept friend requests from people they don't know.
6. Keep an open dialogue with your children. Ask them to let you know if they've received private messages from a stranger or from someone at school who is teasing, harassing or threatening them. Those could be signs of cyber-bullying or even a sexual predator.

Get additional online safety tips, and other relevant information on OnGuardOnline.gov, a great government resource for parents and teens.

History, continued

During national emergencies like 9/11, Hurricanes Katrina and Sandy, and the Haitian earthquake, FCIC's websites and contact center have given millions of people hope and comfort with information on government aid and help finding missing loved ones. And in everyday life, FCIC answers questions and shares helpful tips through social media on blogs, Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Google+, Pinterest, and YouTube.

As it celebrates its 45th anniversary, the Federal Citizen Information Center is changing its name again—to USAGov. And mixing technology with the feedback it gets from people all over the country, more than ever, USAGov is America's guide to the programs and services of the U.S. government.

Things to Consider Before Trusting a Financial Advisor

Do you use or have you ever considered using a financial advisor to help you make money decisions? Before you turn over your hard-earned cash, you can learn the signs of investment fraud and find out how to check the background of your financial advisor. Here are some tips:

1. Be wary of common fraud phrases

Pay attention if an investment advisor or promoter uses the following phrases:

- risk free
- guaranteed earnings
- quick profits
- the investment is government approved
- limited-time offers

2. Check the background of your financial professional

Looking into the background of a financial advisor is one of the most important steps an investor can take toward protecting their assets.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) recently launched SmartCheck.gov to help you check the background of financial professionals. It is an easy and free tool, requiring no usernames or passwords.

3. Research and report investment fraud

You can find information on brokers or file complaints with a few sources:

- The Securities and Exchange Commission: The SEC takes questions or complaints concerning violation of federal securities laws at <http://www.sec.gov/complaint/select.shtml>
- The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority: FINRA accepts complaints about brokers and their firms at <http://www.finra.org/investors/problem>.
- State Consumer Protection Offices: Each state has its own laws and regulations for securities brokers and securities. Securities administrators or state commissions can determine if a broker or company has violated their securities laws and provide information to help you make informed investment decisions.

If you would like financial compensation for your losses, you may want to seek legal action or go through a dispute resolution program.

Publication Pricing

As you look through the Catalog, you'll see that some publications have an individual price and others do not. Booklets are free to the consumer if the sponsoring agency pays the printing and distribution costs. When a booklet has a sales price, the Government Publishing Office \(GPO\) sets the price to cover these costs, and prices vary accordingly. Please note: There is a $2.00 once-per-order service fee for all mail orders to help defray program costs.
